

Can Hillel's funding be put to better use elsewhere?

■ Commentary

Story Comments \(18\)

Share Print Font Size: - +

Posted: Thursday, January 23, 2014 12:00 am

By Colleen M. Jolly | 18 comments

76

Tweet

From my understanding, Hillel is at $12 million of their $18 million goal for their new building. The addition of the new Hillel building would be the second Jewish building on a historically reformed Dutch college that began its roots in theology. As a student of Rutgers, and a resident of New Brunswick, I find myself considering what $18 million means. This is a success of great ardor, but I also fear the demographics do not fit this proposal.

Either way, it's hard not to mention how badly the city of New Brunswick could really use $18 million. The lights on the streets are at 50 percent productivity and — in thinking about our future — it is also hard to dismiss what that $18 million could do in creating residences for Rutgers alumni. With a train station minutes from New York City, I began to see New Brunswick not just as a home to a state university, but a more metropolitan suburb in which I often consider taking up permanent residence. It is a long way off, but you could potentially see New Brunswick as a less-cool Williamsburg.

If you know anything about Israel, you can conclude that pro-Israel parties are good at getting money into funds, i.e. the purchases of Jewish National Fund and modern-day Palestine. On Dec. 2, the Jewish Federation of Greater Middlesex County, a federally and privately funded agency, raised $400,000 at a telefund held at the Douglass Campus Center. I am not 100 percent sure where this money is going, but seeing that they used a University building my only guess would be to the University, or specifically to the proposed Hillel building. This building is to be named after Eva and Arie Halpern.

So I ask you, the reader, if the building for Hillel, seemingly self-funded besides the $3 million dollars gifted (assuming from Rutgers federal endowment) raises any eyebrows. Is the building impractical? As a non-Jewish person, does the Jewish nature make you feel welcome? Do you expect this building to benefit everyone?

I ask that we, the students of Rutgers, re-evaluate the resourcefulness of these presented charitable offerings.

This is just something to think about.

Colleen M. Jolly is a School of Arts and Sciences senior majoring in planning and public policy.

Discuss

Share Print

Posted in Commentary on Thursday, January 23, 2014 12:00 am.

Elegant Beauty Tools from Around the Globe \(THE LINE\)
RU uses losses as motivation \(The Daily Targum\)
Rutgers alumna integrates South Asian culture into board game \(The Daily Targum\)
WEEK IN REVIEW: Laurels and Darts \(The Daily Targum\)

Recommended by

DOWNLOAD
THE DAILY TARGUM
MOBILE APP FOR IPHONE AND ANDROID

Print Editions

Click to read

ISSUU

Open publication - Free publishing

Click to read

ISSUU

Open publication - Free publishing